Do I have to be a Roman citizen to play Caesar IV by tilted mill? The game has been in development since 2004 when it was picked up by Tilted Mill Entertainment. The idea for a sequel was sparked when Caesar III released. Tilted Mill were big fans of the game and decided to create their own instalments after the initial success of the developmental series. "In 2004, we started on Caesar 3 with the vision of being a completely different and fresh experience from Caesar II. When we were almost half way done and waiting for approval, we were approached by a publisher and the game was released. Unfortunately it was not a big hit. Many of our team wanted to continue the series and so they started working on Caesar IV which is now in development. They are currently working hard on it and I am still involved in the team as well." - Jukka Suomalainen, Producer.

"The game is set in the year 74 BC. Emperor Titus is dead, so the Roman Empire is now run by a group of players. Each player is an individual, but together they form the government and the one leader. The game is set in Roman times and you take on the role of a player and can try to gain power or influence in the game by yourself. "The theme of the game is peace, since there are no wars between the players. You have to choose a faction to play with (for example you can play as a Player or as a
